Matter?"-Joine Secretary Long in Praising Bureau Chiefs for the Success of Our War Since Secretary Long's speech in Boston, in which he said that God only knew who wrote the now famous "capture or destroy the Spanish ships" despatch to Dewey, but suggested that it must have been some subordinate clerk in the Department all kinds of surmises have been affoat as to who did write it. The suggestion has made that if any one had knowledge of the individual who framed the message it must surely be Vice-President Roosevelt, who, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was practically responsible for the routine of the Navy Department when the Spanish war began Yesterday a SUN reporter saw the Vice-President at his home at Oyster Bay and asked him if he could give to history the name of the man who wrote that despatch. Col. specifically and he intimated that Secretary Long had placed unnecessary stress upon circumstance which was after all of little all despatches sent out by the department, and for all other actions, and the question as to who penned some particular despatch is of no moment whatever.

Vice-President Roosevelt, however, heartily indorsed Secretary Long's opinion that not sufficient credit and praise had been bestowed upon the bureau chiefs for the outcome of the war with Spain.

"I was glad indeed," he said, "to see the way in which, with characteristic generosity, Secretary Long gives such full recognition to the bureau chiefs for their work, both before and during the war.

"Too much cannot be said for them and for the officers and seamen who manned the ships which fought and also for the officers and seamen who manned the ships which fought and also for the officers and seamen who manned the ships which fought and also for the officers and seamen who manned the ships cruiser and thereby fitted battle-ship, cruiser and torpedo boat, fitted the men in the conning tower and the men in the engine rooms and gun turrets to win the elecisive triumph they did when the actual trial came.

"Moreover, the Secretary of the Navy and every Congressman who had helped in the upbuilding of the navy from 1852 onward earned the right to share in the credit won be our ships at Manila Bay and Santiago. Valor is indispensable, but it is only preparedness which makes valor available, and so the credit for the late war belongs to all who in Congress or in the navy itself helped to make ready the navy as well as those who actually did the fighting.

Another despatch, sent two months before the outbreak of the war, prepared Dewey to go to the Philippines. It was written and signed by Roosevelt and reads as follows:

Keep full of coal, in the event declaration of war Spain, your duty will be to see that the Spain's squadron does not leave the Asiatic coast, and then offensive operations in the Philippine Islands. Keep Olympia until forther widers.

ROOSEVELT. Boston, July 5 -Secretary Long, referring to his recent address in which he said hat he did not know who drew up the despatch ordering Dewey to attack the Spanish fleet at Manila, said in an interview to-day; "Admiral Crowninshield tells me that he wrote it. My memory was that the Admiral told some time ago that it was prepared in his bureau, but by some of his subordinates. It now appears, however, that it was the

It now appears, however, that it was the Admiral himself."

WARHINGTON. July 5.—It is the general belief here that the man who wrote the famous despatch to Admiral Dewey, about whose identity there has been considerable doubt, is I leat. Humes H. Whittlessy, now on the flagship New York at Kobe, Japan. F. W. Calianan, register of the Navy Department, who was recorder of the Strategy Board and a cipher expert in the Bureau of Navigation in the war with Spain, said that he recalled helping Lieut. Whittlessy out the despatch into cipher for transmission to Dewey and was practically certain that Whittlessy had written it.

Another man said to The Sun reporter that he had asked Whittlessy for the original rough copy of the despatch to be kept as a souvenir, and Whittlessy had explained that he had destroyed it as a measure of that he had asked whittlesey for the original rough copy of the despatch to be kept as a souvenir, and Whittlesey had explained that he had destroyed it as a measure of precaution. Whittlesey said, also, according to this man, that he had been teld in general terms by one of his superiors, probably Admiral Crowninshield, what to say to Admiral Dewey, and had then written the message in his own words, using expressions from the cipher book as much as possible. Secretary Long's criticism of the wording of the despatch was that it said "War has commenced," while he would have used "War has begun." The use of the expression, 'War has commenced is easily explained. It is embraced in a cipher symbol of the Navy Department's code book, while no single symbol means. "War has begun." The expression in the despatch, "Use utmost endeavors," was formed of two cipher symbols.

English Oarsmen Have No Need to Change Their Style.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. LONDON, July 5 - Prior to the distribution of the prizes Col. Willan, the umpire of the regatta, said that competitors from the United States and also the Centinent were welcomed, but the results convinced English oarsmen that they had no need as yet to alter their style of rowing. That was the undoubted deduction from Leander's victory, which for good or Il confirmed conservative trainers' lifelong beliefs.

The opinion of rowing men is summed up in an article in the Sportsman, which says that the Pennsylvanians are good and plucky sportsmen. If they had won they would have been warmly cheered

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. LONDON, July 6 .- The Times's yachting expert is pessimistic regarding the chances of the Shamrock II winning the America's Cup. The sergeant said it was against the rules, and Mrs. Levy made such a scene that the sergeant put her in the street.
